The screenshot displays the Automatic CSS web design tool interface. On the left, a sidebar titled 'Buttons & Links' contains settings for 'Buttons', 'Links', and 'Options'. The 'Links' section is active, showing 'Styles' and 'Rules' tabs. The 'Styles' tab displays various link styles, including 'Default link style', 'Link Style Exclusions', and 'Link Classes & Link Hover Classes'. The 'Link Style Exclusions' section is highlighted with a yellow box. A dark blue callout box with yellow text reads: 'Our global styles should not affect links in header and footer'. The main preview area shows a website layout with a dark theme, featuring a header with 'About', 'Shop', and 'Contact' links, and a main content area with a 'Default link style' section. The bottom of the screen shows a video player with a man speaking and a system tray with various icons.

The image is a screenshot of a web browser window displaying a video player. The video player shows a presentation with three slides. The first slide is titled "Link Style Exclusions" and shows a "Text link" in a red color. The second slide is titled "Link Classes & Link Hover Classes" and features a large red background with a yellow text box that says "We want to change color just for this link". The third slide is titled "Default Focus Style (Buttons & Links)" and shows a "Text link" and a red button that says "I am a button". On the left side of the browser, there is a sidebar with a design tool interface. It includes a "Text link" component, a color picker, and a "Links" section with a "link--primary-semi-dark" class selected. The video player has a standard interface with a play button, progress bar, and volume control. In the bottom right corner, there is a small video feed of a man wearing a grey cap and glasses, speaking. The browser's address bar shows "sandbox.automaticcss.com".
